Colic Questions? TheHorse.com Presents Free Ask the Vet LIVE Q&A Chat, Oct. 13

by: The Horse Staff

September 22 2010 Article # 16889

Colic can be a terrifying experience, whether you're trying to determine if your horse has colic, when to call the vet, how to treat him, or how well he might recover from surgery. Do you have questions about colic in horses? Ask them during our Ask the Vet LIVE online Q&A chat about colic on Wednesday, Oct. 13, 8-9 p.m. Eastern U.S. time.

When you register for this event, you'll be able to send in your questions ahead of time. You can also ask questions during the live event on Oct. 13.

This free live chat event is brought to you by ASSURE® Digestive Aid.

Our on-call veterinarians for this event will include:

Anthony Blikslager, DVM, PhD, Dipl. ACVS, professor of equine surgery and gastroenterology at North Carolina State University. His laboratory focuses on how intestinal mucosa repairs after insults such as ischemia. He is an associate editor for the Equine Veterinary Journal and serves on the Editorial Review Board of the American Journal of Veterinary Research. He is also an active member of the American Gastroenterological Association, has more than 120 peer-reviewed publications, and continues to work in the clinic on horses with colic.

Jay Altman, DVM, veterinary management consultant with Arenus. He worked his way through two degree programs as a certified farrier, then managed a referral surgical facility in Pennsylvania before starting Equine Medical Service, a 24/7 exclusively equine ambulatory practice based in Fort Collins, Colo. He also developed, tested, and launched the Assure Product Line. In 2008, he sold the Assure System to Arenus/Novus Nutrition Brands and stayed on as an independent consultant, helping promote and educate consumers and veterinarians on digestive health and Assure Products. He still works part time as a practicing equine veterinarian, specializing in lameness and digestive health.

We hope you can join us on Oct. 13 for this event! Reserve your Webinar seat now!
